The current study of migration processes in historical perspective is becoming more common. Especially it is important in the context of such a popular and meaningful for historiography of young countries subject of ethnic, national and socio-cultural identity. One of the key tasks of the Belarussian historical science in this regard is the study and detailed description of the Belarussian population migration in different regions of Russia, in particular its South — a region having its own specific character and appeal. As a systemic phenomenon it began in the second half of the XIX century. This work evaluates how developed the theme, as well as identifies poorly understood areas of the mentioned issues.

Keywords: history of Belarus, resettlement, South Russia, Kuban, the Black Sea area, sociocultural adaptation, interethnic interaction, national and cultural identity.
